

A INSPECTING

Seattle Repertory Theatre

Dec. 11 - Jan. 5

Director's Notes

The pressures of working for a not-for-profit arts organization occasionally become so great and the tightrope of budget balancing so terrifying that the act of putting on a play can seem far more dramatic than the play itself. So this is a play about that. About putting on A Christmas Carol.

Years ago, I sat on a theatre panel at the National Endowment for the Arts where we heard about an artistic director who had tried to bribe an NEA inspector. The panel was duly shocked by this report. I found it hilarious. It reminded me of Gogol's The Inspector General. If tonight's play reminds you of The Inspector General, you now know why.

I like A Christmas Carol, by the way. It's always been one of my favorite stories. Actually, I've been secretly jealous that ACT got the Seattle Christmas Carol franchise, and out of my bitterness, I wrote this play.
